

KEMPF, CHARLES: Intramurals

KENDALL, CELESTE: Intramurals; GO Co-op,
Vice-President; GRA; SSO; Tri-Y

KINDRED, MARSHA

KING, ROBERT: Intramurals

KINNEY, CATHY: Intramurals; French Club; GRA;
Pep Club; SSO; a Cappella; Madrigal

KIRSCHENMAN, ARDIS: Intramurals; Future
Teachers; German Club; YFC

KISER, STANLEY: Intramurals; Swimming; Spanish
Club; TARS

KITZMAN, GORDON

KITZMAN, NEAL: Intramurals; Student Council

People themselves provide much of the education gained in high school. An insight into the midst of your classmates teaches you the essentials of the intangible subject of human nature. High school shapes your own personality into its mature form. By studying the actions of others, you may discard the bad and maintain the good. In your own peer group you may respect certain qualities of a friend and try to attain the same good qualities. You may also notice a bad characteristic. Often, finding the same bad characteristic in yourself, you will work to overcome the handicap. This system of weeding out bad habits and developing good ones matures you as you strive to find a place for yourself in the world. Talking to successful people, extensive reading, and most important, serious thinking will help you to know yourself and others better. This development of your personality is imperative for success because you express yourself through your personality. The impression you make on others, the way you talk, your appearance, and your outlook are all your personality shining through. Since the high school years are the maturing years, your personality in its final form is produced and stays with you long after graduation. Your individual character is established through observation of the personalities of others and of your own nature. The recognition of your good and bad points and the developing of each leads you to the goal of success.